The detachment under Lieut. Colonel Pratt arrived at Dover very early on the morning of June 13th and marched up the hill towards Dover Castle, where they went into a British Rest Camp. There were no duties during the day and the men were allowed to rest and clean up. In the afternoon almost the entire personnel of Company E marched through Dover and to a point under the Eastern Cliffs where they took a swim in the cold waters of the English Channel.

On June 14th the detachment was split on account of transportation from Dover to Calais. Lieut. Colonel Pratt with Companies A, B and C and the Engineer Train crossed to Calais and went through the same schedule as did the first detachment under Col. Ferguson. The detachment arrived at Calais in the afternoon of June 14th and left at noon on the 17th. They marched to Nordcote and bivouacked for the night, proceeding in the morning to Alembon near Sanghem. See Plate IV.

The detachment under Major Lyerly, composed of Companies D and E, left Dover June 15th and crossed to Calais. After being re-equipped similar to the first detachment, they moved to the Licques Area on June 18th, completing the movement in one day.

The detachment left camp at 8:00 A. M., entrained at Fontillette Station, Calais, at 11:40 A. M., detrained at Audruicq at 12:30 P. M., and marched to Herbinghem, a distance of more than 17 miles, arriving at 7:00 P. M. With the completion of this move the regiment was reunited.
